ABOUT THE COURSE

Research is the most important component of higher education. It is a crucial dimension of quality. Quality, in turn, is ensured only through ensuring empowerment of people involved in it. An environment of cross disciplinary discussion, constructive criticism, hands-on experiences to initiate appropriate research work, is needed, particularly in the field of Social Science. Realities in Social Science or human sciences are often understood in its natural and unique setting and numbers may not adequately express the realities of human and society. The Short Term Course purports to develop a broad understanding of various issues in dealing with Qualitative data in Social Science Research. In the broader context of research problems related to human thought and action, it will be an attempt to understand the ways to deal with discourses in text, image or movies or any other media in the context of unique situation of human and society.

It aims at developing research skills of analysis of qualitative data and presentation of ideas in academically acceptable ways. With a major focus on discourse analysis and grounded theory approach, the course will incorporate various practical activities and will try to create a platform to understand how research is done in the fields related to human and society, therefore, providing an insight to look beyond the disciplinary boundaries of social and humanities in understanding human realities.
